

Some people doesn't want to learn languages except for their native. But for others it is not a secret that language is the road map of a culture. It tells you where it's people come from and where they are going. So, is it ^a true or false sentence?

As for me, I think it is a true sentence, because language can help you to understand every person you need, make a dialog, for instance, ask for something, and broaden your outlook. Also it is a good way to make new friends with somebody and achieve your personal goals.

In order to show why I think so, I want to give several examples. First of all, my personal life consists of my language experience. My family said that it ^{would} be hard to live among foreign teens. When I arrived to another country, I ^d have to understand what people wanted ^{to} tell me. Also there were different exhibitions and cultural events that I wanted to visit. They required some language skills. Secondly, learning diverse languages helped me to develop my mind for my future exams.

In conclusion, I would like to say that people should learn several languages just because it's important for their life. It can help them to learn more about other cultural traditions and evolve their own skills.
